

I make use of my XM radio 100% of the time during any trips beyond 50 miles or so from my home town. In the South, thunder storms are a common event and early warning is clearly a benefit to travelers. Without this information on XM, I feel less comfortable in my summertime travels.

In addition, from a libertarian perspective, this seems to me as a clear example of an attempt by the NAB to stifle competition, pure and simple.

regards

george crowell